The Humor of Christ....

I share with you one of my daily devotions. This one is from Elton Trueblood, a Quaker author and professor of philosophy.

Any alleged Christianity which fails to express itself in gaiety, at some point, is clearly spurious. The Christian is light-hearted, not because he is blind to injustice and suffering, but because he is convinced that these, in the light of the divine sovereignty, are never ultimate. She is convinced that the unshakable purpose is the divine rule in all things, whether of heaven or earth (Ephesians 1:10). Though she can be sad, and is often perplexed, she is never really worried. The well-known humor of the Christian is not a way of denying the tears, but rather a way of affirming something which is deeper than tears.

The consequences of Christ's rejection of the dismal are great, not only for common life, but also for theology. If Christ laughed a great deal, as the evidence shows, and if He is what He claimed to be, we cannot avoid the logical conclusion that there is laughter and gaiety in the heart of God. The deepest conviction of all Christian theology is the affirmation that the God of all the world is like Jesus Christ. Because the logical development is from the relatively known to the relatively unknown, the procedure is not from God to Christ, but from Christ to God. If we take this seriously, we conclude that God cannot be cruel, or self-centered or vindictive, or even lacking in humor.
